Mypressi Twist Is the World's First Portable Espresso Machine

Dedicated to all espresso addicts

It seems that the idea for Espressi's first product, the Mypressi Twist, was envisioned one morning by Stephen O'Brien, founder of the company, when he began craving for an espresso while on his honeymoon (he really must be a coffee addict, I guess.) "Too bad" for him that he found himself in a tropical paradise with no access to civilization and, consequently, to any form of coffee maker. That moment, he started thinking about a new innovative machine that could produce quality espressos and still be portable enough to travel anywhere.

That's how the world's first handheld espresso machine was born, whose goal is changing "the way America drinks coffee." The Mypressi Twist uses a patented-pending pneumatic engine system and gives you instant and fresh espressos with no need for external power.

"The Twist has exceeded expectations by consistently delivering espresso with ideal aroma, flavor, color and cream; all from a small one-pound machine. This really is the first quality espresso machine that allows you to say, 'I'll take it to go'. I invite any coffee connoisseur or barista to put the Mypressi Twist to the test," states Stephen O'Brien.

Twist works equally well with fresh coffee grounds or ESE coffee pods, employed in most espresso machines and uses small standardized gas cartridges that produce approximately four double shots of espresso. To operate it, you simply insert a cartridge into the pressure chamber, fill the basket with the coffee of your choice and the upper compartment with hot water. Then, with just a pull of the trigger, you get your hot espresso that you can drink alone or create an array of espresso-based drinks.

The device is stylish, lightweight and effortless to use and will probably become a must-have for all the espresso freaks out there who have experienced the "horror" of not being able to get a cup of coffee in the morning. It will hit American store shelves this fall at an estimated price of $129.
